*BEFORE MASTERY. BEFORE STYLE.
BEFORE RECOGNITION — THERE IS THE SPARK.*

This first 2026 issue of Get Inspired Society Magazine explores creative origin stories: the moment where intuition turns into direction, and an idea becomes a path. We invited artists, photographers, designers, and visual storytellers to reflect on their beginnings — the root ideas, defining memories, and early impulses that continue to shape their work today.

Featuring the inspiring work of Clemens Maurer (p4),
Dina Belenko (p14), Michael Duckworth (p24),
Michelle Quirós (p34), and Oscar Rey (p44).

Origins marks the beginning of every image I create—the seed of all AI-driven ideas. My process always starts with something disarmingly simple and familiar: a landscape, a person, an object, a quiet sense of the everyday. But within that simplicity, there is always a shift—something feels slightly off, as if reality hesitated for a second. In this series, heavy rocks float mid-air, defying logic with total calm. AI helps me bend the familiar into visual paradox, revealing moments that feel real yet impossible—like the first frame of a dream you almost remember. Origins is an invitation to look closer, to sense the difference, and to imagine what comes next.

Two projects, Blocked Nostalgia and Dark and Humid Place, both tracing how, after moving to Los Angeles, I continue to seek new roots in unfamiliar soil. Blocked Nostalgia revisits Soviet panelkas — the concrete apartment blocks of my childhood that, from a distance, reveal unexpected warmth and communal strength. Dark and Humid Place imagines a world where tiny clay houses are overgrown with mushrooms — creatures that thrive where it's dark and humid, in spaces made damp by tears. Together, they reflect how resilience quietly grows out of loss.

The origins of my photography lie in paying close attention to the overlooked. I'm drawn to subtle gestures, shifting light and shadow, and the quiet tension between people and their environments. My earliest inspiration came from the rugged beauty of the Lake District. Exploring its untamed landscapes forged a deep connection with nature and sharpened my eye for composition — foundations that continue to guide my artistic journey. When I moved to London, I began experimenting with street photography. The city's constant movement became my classroom. I studied light bouncing off bus windows, shadows stretching across pavements, and the choreography of strangers crossing paths. Slowly, my technique improved, and my style took shape. Over time I learned to previsualise an image — to see the photograph in my mind before I ever pressed the shutter, often stripping back a scene to its essence.

MICHELLE QUIRÓS

The Panamenian series is about nostalgia for the land, longing for one's roots and the blood that runs through one's veins. It represents my origins and is the first photographic series I ever created.

This series, created in 2023, consists of eight self-portraits in which I present Panamanian culture that is largely unknown in Europe: beads made by the Ngäbe Buglé indigenous people, Panamanian peasant footwear, pre-Columbian huacas as good luck charms, and montuno hats.

My mother grew up with little knowledge of her family's past, and for years I have been piecing together that missing lineage. The comic I created is born from this search, an attempt to give shape to fragments, to imagine what was lost, and to weave memory with invention. Alongside it, my drawings from 2018 to 2024 form a calendar of my own origins, each piece a marker of change and survival. Together, they speak of inheritance both known and unknown, of stories carried forward, and of how art can become a vessel for remembering and belonging.
